REVIEW

The book begins with Pelzer as a twelve-year-old boy living in Daly City, California. He is late for school and rushes to finish his chores before leaving for school. His mother hits him in the face and he falls to the floor.

In 2nd chapter, Pelzer describes his early years as a happy child who loved spending time with his family. He talks about how his mother was once loving and caring towards him. He's mother begins to abuse him physically and emotionally. She forces him to eat dog faeces and vomit, and she locks him in the bathroom for hours on end.

Pelzer's mother begins to withhold food from him as a form of punishment. He becomes malnourished and weak. Pelzer's mother stabs him in the stomach with a knife. He's father is away on business trips frequently, leaving Pelzer alone with his mother. She continues to abuse him. Pelzer finds solace in religion and begins to pray for help.

Pelzer's teachers begin to notice that something is wrong at home and report their concerns to Child Protective Services. Pelzer becomes determined to survive and fight back against his mother's abuse. Child Protective Services finally intervenes and rescues Pelzer from his mother's abuse.
